1. The Genesis of a Musical Legend

1.1 From Gounod to Webber

The story of the Phantom of the Opera begins long before Andrew Lloyd Webber’s score graced Broadway. The narrative was first brought to the stage by French composer Charles Gounod in 1881, based on Gaston Leroux’s 1910 novel. Gounod’s original opera, however, faded into obscurity as the 20th century progressed. It wasn’t until 1986 that Lloyd Webber, in collaboration with lyricist Charles Hart and composer Richard Stilgoe, reimagined the tale for a contemporary audience. The result was a dazzling blend of operatic grandeur and pop inspired melodies that would go on to become one of the most successful musical productions in history.

1.2 The Musical’s Rise to Global Fame

Premiering at the Palace Theatre in London, the musical quickly captured the imagination of theatregoers. By 1989, it had transferred to Broadway’s Majestic Theatre, where it set records for ticket sales and longevity. Over the decades, the show has toured across the globe, translated into dozens of languages, and earned a staggering number of awards. Its ability to combine dramatic storytelling with emotionally resonant music has cemented its place in the pantheon of classic musical theatre.

While the musical contains many memorable numbers, “Music of the Night” stands out as the centerpiece of the Phantom’s musical identity. The song’s opening line—“The velvet night is a violet dream”—sets the stage for an atmospheric journey into the heart of the Phantom’s world.
